The Intelligent Skilful & Evocative Use of Language (IULMW1)

A writer is someone in love with language: words that can unsettle us or move us to tears; that can amuse, enchant, enrage, and nudge us into new ways of looking at the world. But whatever effects you're aiming for, you should try to use language that's intelligent – the product of careful thinking; skillful – handled with imaginative flair; evocative – words that suggests much more than the relatively few words on the page. Using short writing exercises and samples from memorable stories, this workshop encourages you to think beyond the obvious, to find ways of using words to captivate readers from your opening sentence.

Susan Midalia

Susan Midalia has a PhD in Literature and extensive experience as a teacher, editor workshop facilitator and judge of literary competitions. She has published two collections of short stories: A history of the beanbag (2007), short-listed for the Western Australian Premier's Book Awards; and An unknown sky (2012), shortlisted for the Steele Rudd Award and long listed for the Frank O'Connor International Short Story Competition.
